"For clubs may come and clubs may go, but style goes on forever."

This was the retort, accompanied by a shrug of the shoulders with which New York's fashion authorities commented on the resolution of the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs denouncing long skirts.

It is the style, the authorities say, against that dictum the women may pass resolution after resolution, but the designers will have their way. The long skirt is here, and here to stay, in spite of the anti-germ crusaders and the hosiory manufacturers.

"Skirts for street wear will be from four to six inches from the ground," the style long continued grows monotonous. Short skirts in evitably necessitate long skirts.

"Paris makes the style. We here in America must bow to it, whether we like it or not. We may rebel at first, but in the end all we can do is to modify it a little for American use. We cannot create style in this country, because we are tob busy. Our artists and designers will not take the trouble to study the art, as the French people do.
